

The TEAMDAD Fathering Self-Assessment Tool

We spend time based on our own sense of priorities. For men with families the basic tug-of-war for time is between family and work.

When asked, most men would say their family is the most important aspect of their lives. While fathering, like mothering, doesn't come with a handbook, there are two primary obstacles to becoming a better father: time and awareness.

Congratulations for taking the time to take this self-assessment and develop a greater awareness for improving your fathering. Being a Great Dad is no more than being a great leader within your family. The process starts with figuring out where you are and then charting a path to where you want to be. This self-assessment tool is meant to be a starting point. For a more comprehensive fathering assessment tool, go to www.fathers.com.

Instructions: answer each of these questions candidly and honestly. Remember, you are self scoring this assessment and you are doing this for your own benefit. The purpose is to identify where you are today, not where you want to be.

This assessment is divided into four categories: Financial, Physical, Emotional, and Spiritual. Score yourself on a scale of 0 to 5 using the following ratings:
